Under the terms of the agreement, NEPS will implement the Paloma Print Perfect™ document testing solution in the NEPS hosted solutions environment, including complete integration with the NEPS customer dashboard.

Print Perfect automates the resource-consuming and manual document testing process, making it possible to increase productivity and reduce labor costs. Implementing Print Perfect will allow NEPS to significantly reduce time to market and costs for its customers by providing the ability to test more documents in less time, more easily make modifications, and shorten document composition software upgrades projects by minimizing the need for manual testing. For Paloma, this partnership provides the opportunity to take advantage of the NEPS hosted solution for clients who don't have the information technology infrastructure or financial resources to implement an in-house document testing automation solution.

“In today's tough economic environment, where every company is being forced to do more work with fewer resources, we are continually looking for ways to reduce document creation and production costs for our clients and get to market faster,” said Denise Miano, founder and chief technology officer for NEPS. “Adding the Paloma solution to our hosted platform environment and service offerings further enhances our ability to quickly and cost-effectively produce the highest quality documents, as well as provide the means to more thoroughly test document applications. Additionally, the training and support Paloma provides to our clients has been exceptional. It's very important for us to partner with companies that excel in these areas because service excellence is a top priority for NEPS and all of our customers.”

“Joining forces with NEPS – both as a customer and marketing partner – allows us to offer both NEPS and its customers an affordable, easy-to-use solution that addresses the challenges of high volume document testing, either as a licensed software solution or a hosted solution, via NEPS,” said Joe Pigeon, president of Paloma Print Products. “NEPS is well-known for delivering best-in-class document solutions across a wide variety of industries, with a particularly strong presence in the insurance vertical. We are excited to align ourselves with NEPS because they share our vision of delivering superior solutions that help companies lower document production costs while improving document quality.”
